We are pleased to note by the Groton Times that the industrial prosperity of the Wells River valley was never so great as today. Of course, granite is largely responsible for this. Our neighbor says that South Ryegate is particularly active, although Groton is feeling the breath of life, ending with the prediction that "at no distant day this valley will be one of the largest granite producing sections in the country." All up for the booming Vermont.

State's Attorney Gates' many friends throughout the county would like to know what there was in his appearance which induced a vendor of "soft drinks" to give him a compound which smelled and tasted like whiskey, when that official called for harmless moxie, the other day, after a ball game.—Northfield News.

Perhaps it was the same mysterious something which caused a Northfield nickel-in-the-slot man to try to induce former State's Attorney Jackson to play his machine when that official was looking for just such game.

LIQUOR SELLING BY CLUBS.

The Barre Times claps its hands in childish glee because "Attorney-General Fitts has expressed the opinion that it is contrary to the spirit of the local option law that clubs in no-license communities should be allowed to dispense liquor to their members." It calls the open saloon the poor man's club and sees a marked similarity between the two. There is grave doubt if the "Rich man's club," as the contemporary is pleased to call it, can lawfully be closed, as it is not a place of public resort and liquor are served to none but members. A man has a perfect right under the law, even under the old prohibition, to have liquor in his home and serve them to his guests, as was proven more than once, and as every member has an equal share in the club, it is fair to suppose that the club room is his home while he is there. The question of clubs or organizations furnishing liquor to their members was pretty well thrashed out about seven years ago when the Vermont Fish and Game league was under fire for serving ale to its members. Judge Rowell, it will be remembered, gave it as his opinion that a league had a perfect right so to do and that it was not contrary to the prohibitory law. This is a good opportunity to test the new law as regards clubs and it may be found that there is a decided difference between them and the corner saloon, where any loafer will be served if he has the price.—Vergennes Enterprise.

There was no undue elation on our part in reporting the personal opinion of Attorney General Fitts to the effect that social clubs "may not under the law serve liquor even to their members. On the contrary, it was a sober seeking after the consensus of judicial and legal opinion on this mooted point that led us to make reference to the action of the attorney general in closing Burlington clubs for the transfer of liquor; and from the standpoint of equal right to all people it seemed to us that his opinion was correct. Along this same line, a federal opinion by Judge McPherson on a Pennsylvania case has recently come to our notice. Judge McPherson says in finding the transfer of liquor by a club to its members to be a sale, the following: "If the result I have reached is correct, I believe it to be in the line of enforcing equality before the law; and equality before the law is a principle of American society, than which there is none more vital. Privilege and a privileged class are and ought to be intolerable; and it comes irritatingly near to a privilege when social clubs, offering advantages of comfort and luxury that are only within the reach of the more prosperous, escape a share of the public burdens, because a refined reasoning declares that they are doing no more than distributing a common stock of liquor among their members, while the robust sense of the community, not excluding the club members themselves, knows the transaction to be a sale."

The contemporary will note the opinion that a club is not a place of public resort is not the deciding factor which determines the illegality of the practice, and the further fact that only club members are eligible as customers would have as little weight in law. The point at issue is whether or not there is a sale of liquor. Of course it is possible to twist one's reasoning about so that the passing of liquor checks over the counter may tend to blind the point at issue. And some authorities do hold that this does not constitute a sale. We have the benefit of one writer on this very same subject in a recent number of the Central Law Journal, which we quote as follows: "In the light of this analysis of the conflicting decisions on the subject, it seems to the writer of this article that the overwhelming weight of authority in that a bona fide social club in furnishing liquor to its members for a price, either for cash or on credit, is engaged in the sale of such liquors. In reaching this conclusion, he has not overlooked the fact that two standard authorities, Black and Intoxicating Liquor and the first edition of American and English Encyclopedia of Law, have enunciated a contrary doctrine; but it has been seen that the majority of the decisions they cite to support their statements have either been overruled, modified or distinguished, or, when thoroughly analyzed, do not directly decide the question at issue."
